The Right to Peace Three Celebrations

In Support of International Peace Day at the United Nations, September 21 and 22, 2018

Three important celebrations converge in September 2018. They are interrelated in significant and fascinating ways.

Held at United Nations headquarters in New York City, this celebration embodies the hopes of humanity for enduring, just and practical peace in our world.

Three Celebrations:

- The 70th Anniversary of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. In 1948, the shockwaves of World War II still reverberated around the world. People of conscience around the world sought common standards of human rights upon which everyone could agree, to prevent war and sustain peace. They wrote, and the young United Nations ratified, a simple declaration, with 30 parts that fit on two pages, in plain language. It is the most-translated document in human history, with 508 translations and counting. 70 years later, the Declaration is still fresh and vital, and is still unfulfilled, though much progress has been made.

- The 120th birthday of Premier Zhou Enlai is being celebrated throughout China in 2018. Zhou Enlai is respected in his homeland because he stood for integrity, compassion, and dialogue. His common touch helped create a new nation and send her along the path to today's great accomplishments. His creative vision opened China up to the world, and led to recognition by the global community. But most people outside China know little about this profound peacemaker, and this celebration helps to close that gap, so people can better understand China's inner purpose. China seeks to live up to the challenge posed by Zhou Enlai: to serve as a leader for peace in the world, alongside other great nations.

- The 65th Anniversary of the Five Principles of Peace: recognizing the core work of Zhou Enlai, who was inspired by the United Nations to design a five-part formula to sound relationships among people, and to diplomacy. It is used to this day as the central idea of diplomacy in China; its significance was later recognized by the UN, and it resounds through many modern international institutions. Sovereignty, non-aggression, non-interference, equality, peaceful co-existence: the Five Principles are a simple guide to peace.

"The Right to Peace" is the official theme of United Nations International Peace Day, enacted by the General Assembly in 1991. These celebrations include an art gallery, a book announcement and signing, a press conference and banquet, a youth observance, and an experience of the philosophy of the Tao. All sessions are open to the public.

1. Book Publication: The book announced at this event is the first ever English translation of "My Uncle Zhou Enlai," the beloved popular book in China written by Zhou Bingde. The author, who will be present in New York for this event, is the niece of Zhou Enlai, who grew up with the Premier in West Flower Hall, the equivalent of the White House in China. We are honored to welcome the author, visiting New York and the UN for the first time. Zhou Bingde will speak, and will sign copies of the new book personally.

2. Youth Observance: A group of students from China travels to New York, to participate and support the official Youth Observance of UN Peace Day. These young people present, in song, symbol and movement, their understanding of the Five Principles of Peace of China's hero, Zhou Enlai. Each Principle is symbolically linked to one of the Five Elements of classical Chinese philosophy.

3. Tao of Peace: The international Prayer for Peace takes place at the United Nations Chapel, and brings together representatives of the major faiths and philosophies. The group from China will contribute an explanation and experience of the Tao, one of the root cultural, scientific traditions of China. The program includes practices and history that connect modern China with its deepest historical roots, tracing their development through the practical example of Zhou Enlai.

4. The Benevolence Gallery brings together the finest works of some of China's leading young artists. This collection was created specifically for the Right to Peace events at the United Nations, and is dedicated to the memory of China's peacemaker, Zhou Enlai, who was a leading supporter of the arts.

The vision, skill, and free spirit expressed by these young artists demonstrates how modern China participates in an international culture of peace. A number of the young artists are traveling to New York for the occasion.

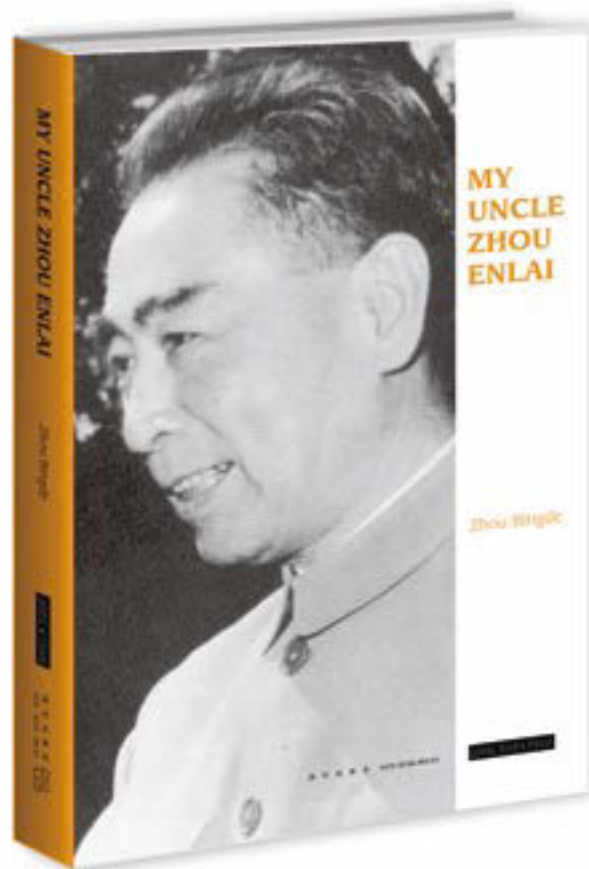

This program informs the whole world with stories of peacemaking that inspire emulation by everyone-- a durable, real, practical peace, rooted in people's hearts, in families and communities, in cities, states and provinces, in social and economic balance, supporting an "ecological civilization" in which China is taking an important role.

Publication Announcement and Book Signing

For the first English publication of

“My Uncle Zhou Enlai”

by Zhou Bingde

Date of Publication: September 21, 2018

Publisher: China International Publishing Group

Zhou Bingde is a niece of the first Premier of the People's Republic of China, Zhou Enlai (1898-1976). She grew up with him and his wife, from age 12 to 22, at West Flower Hall (Zhongnanhai). This traditional residence and garden is next to the Forbidden City in central Beijing.

She is the former vice president of the China News Service and member of the Central Committee of China.

Zhou Enlai served as Premier of the People's Republic of China from 1949 to 1976, and as its first Foreign Minister through most of the 1950s. His wife, Deng Yingchao, was one of the founders of the women's movement in China, which Zhou strongly supported.

They had no surviving children, so Zhou Bingde is one of the few close family members who knew the very private Zhou Enlai well, during the critical years of China's emergence as a global power. She maintained a close relationship with him throughout his life; her intimate personal knowledge of his life and work, and her deep and thoughtful stories, are a unique experience.

This book is Zhou Bingde's autobiography, depicting the time she spent with her uncle, starting as a young girl and growing into a talented, professional woman who made her career as a writer, broadcaster, and professional journalist.

Previously available only in Chinese, this publication is the first release of this historic work in the English language. It has been a steady best-seller in China for many years, still in circulation and available in many bookstores.

This is the first book written about the former Premier by a family member. There are some useful political and social histories about Zhou Enlai but "My Uncle Zhou Enlai" tells touching personal stories about Zhou Enlai, from the perspective of his own niece.

She was a direct and thoughtful witness to history, from a trained professional communicator, and provides insight into the roots of modern China, which have grown deeper and wider through the years, based on the original ideas and policies developed by Premier Zhou Enlai.

The author's presentation begins with a personal telling of stories from her book, which reveal personal details of the character of Zhou Enlai, and of classical Chinese character and civilization.

Zhou Bingde speaks about the impact that Zhou Enlai had on her life, as a teenager and young woman; and the impact he had on the people who worked with and around him, that she directly observed. Then she will speak about conclusion she draws from these personal stories, to the influence he had on the emergence of China, beginning in the early 20th Century.

She will speak about the core elements of his character, and how they reflect through the prism of the people of China, the ideals and self-image, the will to peace, to which China aspires.

She will talk about Zhou Enlai's masterwork of philosophy and diplomacy, the Five Principles of Peace, which wrote in 1953 and whose 65th anniversary is celebrated this year. She will reflect on the impact this work had on the Non-Aligned Movement, and on the core principles of modern statecraft.

The Five Principles of Peace

presentation by a Delegation of Students from China

Designed by the Zhou Enlai Peace Institute for presentation on September 21, 2018, New York

United Nations International Day of Peace

“Zhou Enlai is loved and respected as a leader for peace in China, like Martin Luther King in America; like Nelson Mandela in Africa; like Mahatma Gandhi in India.”

“Zhou Enlai -- the first premier of modern China. This year is his 120th birthday.

He saw a world filled with violence and injustice. His heart was heavy, because Zhou Enlai loved people so much, and longed for peace.

So he wrote five principles of peace. as a foundation for ourselves, our community, and our nations. A foundation, a beginning. It was a simple version of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights.”

“The first principle: sovereignty. Mutual respect for every nation’s land. Like the earth element, a secure home is fundamental to peace. We have the right to walk on our home land, and seek our destiny where we were born.”

A student shows the Chinese character for Earth, and the English word, with an image of earth behind.

A student holds a bowl of earth, taken from the grounds of the 911 Memorial in New York, and shows it to the audience. He picks up some earth, and passes it through his fingers. He presents the bowl to an audience member and bows.

“The second principle: non-aggression. We do not fight to solve our problems -- we discuss, listen, and compromise. We connect minds and hearts, not fists. Like the metal element, we use the sharpness of intelligence and respect, far more powerful than the sword of steel.”

A student shows an iron arrowhead, of classic Chinese design. He touches it to his forehead, presents it to an audience member, and bows.

“The third principle: Non-interference. We respect everyone’s unique traditions, culture and history, and our own ways of solving challenges. Like the water element, we flow around the rocks of our differences. We give each other space to be different.”

A student shows a bowl of pure spring water from China to the audience, swirls it around, and tastes it. He presents the bowl to an audience member, and bows.

“The fourth principle: Equality. Each nation is equal, regardless of how big or rich we are, and we all help each other grow, with sustainable work and growth. Like the wood element, which is useful to all, creating shared wealth and practical benefits.”

A student shows the Chinese character for Wood, and the English word, with image of a face with a candle, and of the flag collection in front of the United Nations.

A student shows a small stick of wood, taken from the park opposite the UN, to the audience. He slaps it in his hand, and smells it. He presents the stick to an audience member, and bows.

“The fifth principle: Peaceful co-existence. We not only recognize our diversity -- we celebrate it, because it makes us strong. With the fire element, the nations are forged together, with heat for security, and light for the mind.”

A student lights a candle from the New York community shows it to audience, making a slow turn to look into everyone's eyes. He presents the candle to an audience member, and bows.

A student shows the Chinese character for Fire, and the English word, with images of hands joined, and of Zhou Enlai welcoming Richard Nixon to Beijing.

“These simple lessons are Zhou Enlai’s gift to you. They are echoed in the UN Declaration of Human Rights, which we celebrate this year. We offer this gift in humility, from the root of wisdom of six thousand years of Chinese culture, and the passion of the Chinese people for peace -- to the youth of the world, the Nations, United.”

“We honor Kofi Annan -- a great diplomat from Ghana, the heart of Africa. His recent passing saddened the whole world, and the family that is the United Nations.

He was the first African to achieve the highest honor of diplomacy, as Secretary-General of the United Nations, and his work was partly inspired by the Five Principles written by Zhou Enlai.”

All participants stand in silence for a few moments.

The students come from schools in Beijing and Macau, traveling specially to New York for the "Right to Peace" events.

The Tao of Peace

Introduction to Tao Science

the people of China who desire peace deeply

- they have experienced war so painfully
- their inner nature, from 6000 years of civilization

Zhou Enlai embodies this tradition, so we celebrate his 120th birthday

Lao Tse, fundamental Chinese philosopher, found the core of peace 2600 years ago:

“It cannot be spoken”

“The Way that can be spoken is not The Way”

Stillness is at the center of all:

- the useful part of the wheel is the center, which does not move
- the essential part of the wall is the window, which is empty
- the person who speaks little, knows much
- the leader who acts best is unknown
- the teacher who teaches best, lets students learn themselves

Music of Silence
solo performance of the Chinese Harp,
from the Chinese community of New York City

Tao Science respects the simple soul at the core of all religions, philosophies

- Jesus spoke, his last words -- “It is finished”
- Moses knew -- the name of God cannot be spoken
- Mohammed taught -- the Infinite has no image
- Buddha lived -- to release all attachment into pure mind

Tao contains all words, all images, and Tao is nothing

- When you truly understand Tao, you laugh
- Your mind gives up chasing itself

Make Peace

Every gesture contains the whole world
Peace is always present, in our body-mind-heart

motion painting performed in silence by Zhou Bingde, grand niece of Zhou Enlai on a large piece of rice paper

和平

Painting is presented to host, Reverend Dionne Boissiere, Chaplain of the United Nations Chapel, for permanent display

Tao te Ching

each choice we make, each breath we take, contains full life's meaning

Lao Tse's master work, "Tao te Ching" is only 81 short pages

An audience member helps to select a passage from the Tao; audience members participate

The selected passage from Tao te Ching is read; in English and in Chinese

It is the Tao message for Peace Day, for everyone present, from Lao Tse across the centuries

Practice

How to sit, breathe, to visit in Tao together in silence, stillness

What to think/not think
What to see/not see

silence

Benevolence

“the quality of kindness”

A group of well-known, successful young artists from across China travels halfway across the world to share their visions of peace with the United Nations.

This one-time collection is dedicated to Zhou Enlai, first Premier of China, a hero of peace and understanding, on the occasion of his 120th birthday.

The Benevolence collection consists of 23 original works, on display in America for the first time. It is organized by Beijing gallery La Vie Art Salon and its visionary director, Gao Chao, with the supporter of the Ambassador Club.

Gallery visitors will have the opportunity to participate in a silent auction offering selected pieces of the Benevolence collection.
